Abstract. Expansion of trade in manufactures between developed and developing countries has had a far greater effect on labour markets than earlier research suggested. In developing countries (the South), unskilled workers have benefited most from this trade, but in developed countries (the North) the gains have been concentrated on those with skills, while unskilled workers have suffered falling wages and rising unemployment, which has worsened income distribution and aggravated other ...

This paper analyzes a North-South trade model with offshoring and unemployment due to union wage setting. A reduction in the cost of offshoring decreases employment in the North except possibly if there is little offshoring initially. If the scale of Northern firms also falls, then each Northern agent's welfare declines. Unions have an incentive to reduce their own bargaining power by ...

In recent decades, a new kind of North-South trade has begun to emerge driven by the abundance of cheap labour in the South. The production of many basic goods and services is being transferred from the high-wage economies of the North to the low-wage economies of the South, whilst the North is specializing in 'knowledge-intensive' activities.

With high employment rates across the South East and South West of England, as well as lower than average employment rates in Scotland, the North East and the North West, it would appear there is still a clear North-South divide in the UK. And it's not just employment rates that illustrate the division.
